YOUNG'S ROSEATE TALK.
President Young's official acts sometimes contradict his encouraging interviews. Several weeks ago Nick delivered a press interview in which he painted the baseball situation with three or four coats of the richest red coloring matter he could find in his brain. I referred to it at the time, and concluded that, as he had the actual figures of attendance in proof and I had not, his opinion was better than mine, provided of course that his expressed opinion was not a "jolly." There is evidence now that it was a "jolly" of the juiciest kind, for Nick in his official capacity has just raised the sinking fund percentage the second time.

The League at its consolidation with the American association contracted to assume heavy obligations, for which notes were given payable at different periods of time out of the League's treasury. A takeoff of 10 per cent. from the gross receipts of every game, it was decided, would be sufficient to raise the amounts as they became due. That the revenues fell short of the original calculations was proved when the League at its June conference ordered the sinking fund takeoff to be raised from 10 to 12 1/2 per cent. Very recently this sum has been raised the second time to 16 2/3 per cent.

There is mathematical evidence that President Young's recent words about the wonderful revival in baseball interests was not founded on fact. The season has a month or more to run yet, and the crowds are once more falling off. This is due in a great degree to the fact that the games at this writing are being played in the east, whereas they were being played in the west when Mr. Young gave out that interview. There seems to be no doubt of the fact that the attendance in the east comparatively falls away below that of the west at this time. An explanation is found in the fact that the second season's work of the Boston, New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia and Washington has been much poorer since July 15 than it was previous to that time, whereas the work of the Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Louisville and Chicago has been much improved.

While on the subject of baseball failures financially let me say a word about the case of that club probably on record. I refer to the failure of baseball this year in Columbus, O. The team which represented that city in the Western league cost only $2,000 a month in salaries and the Western league championship. It closed up with a record of 12 wins and its books showed a clear loss of $8,000. If there has ever been such a sweeping financial disappointment in baseball in any city it has not been reported. This club paid out only $6,000 in salaries. Its other expenses were not more than $5,000 yet it did not in the three months exceed $8,000 in receipts. There is a whole series of cases for men who invest money in baseball. The text is this: No city will support a cheap team in a minor league when it has had a better and more expensive team in a major league for years.

The Cleveland team continues to hold up its prediction that they would win the second championship. They are now sure to go home still in the lead, and that means an almost even chance for the flag. I have Anson backing me in my opinion that Cleveland cannot be overhauled by the Boston, and that if those two teams meet on Oct. 15 the Cleveland will win. I am another Corbett-Sullivan case, in which the youngster will win with ease. Of course Anson's wish may be father of the prediction, for he doesn't love the Boston since they so ruthlessly dashed the cup from his lips last fall. Yet he should not have any overstock of gratitude for the Cleveland, who are still greenbacks next work by beating them while the Boston were on their celebrated rush down the homestretch.

If the Cleveland win the second championship John Clarkson ought to be a proud man, because then he will have been a member of both championship teams—a distinction which can be claimed by no other ball player.

Mike Kelly and Jack Glasscock lost heavily by backing Sullivan in the recent New Orleans episode. King Kelly is good loser, as has often been proved in his reverses at the Guttenberg track. Indeed he is "broken" is his natural financial condition. Therefore his greatest regret just now is not for the loss of his "leg good," but because his admired friend "Sully" got as badly bruised up as the New York did in this season's back. With Glasscock it is different. Jack's money is part of his soul, and he is suffering from the theoretical tortures of the departed spirits who are not saved. He is not so reckless with his money as is Kelly, but in the Sullivan-Corbett controversy he thought he had a safe investment. Hence the pain is all the greater. Unless he finds another old owner of a place next pitcher, and winter Jack's Christmas will be filled with bitter memories of the early September calamity.

A mind reader would have had a rich field to work upon the day after Stein pitched part of a game against the old man and his Corbett and prevented them from getting a single hit. Stein must have sensed his stupor, in letting Stein go when he had him in the stable. It was he who brought the young man out of the backwoods and placed him in prominence.

A similar experience has befallen Ward, however, and he had no license to laugh at Anson's dilemma. Ward allowed Terry last spring on a game back pitcher, and Terry gave in Pittsburgh, where he proves to be their winning pitcher. Still Parker, he goes in against Ward a team and takes revenge, which was as sweet as New Orleans molasses.

The New Yorks had a pitcher named Sullivan last year who didn't suit Manager Powers, and he was released. Comiskey took him up, and now he is the winning pitcher of the Cincinnati club. All of these instances show there is no such thing as infallibility in baseball management.

A startling fact which confronts the managers and magnates today is the scarcity of "young bloods" capable of holding up their ends with the old League players. Many have been tried, and the failures have been not a few. The latest new player to show great promise is McMahon, of the New Yorks. He was signed as a catcher, but will probably be kept at first base, where he has shown marked ability.

O. P. CAYLOR.

GIVE NO QUARTER.

Never did the old saw, "He laughs best who laughs last," receive a better illustration than in the present condition of the tariff controversy. Two years ago our free trade friends were in the height of their glory. The Republican congress and administration had framed and was about to enact into law, on the very eve of the approaching congressional elections, one of the most radically changed and generally applicable tariff measures that was ever devised. There was endless opportunity to represent that measure during the summer months and through the early fall. Every Republican congressman was obliged to be in his seat, because of the narrow protectionist majority, in order to carry through the pending legislation; while of the Democratic minority the presence of only a few were needed in Washington to carry out their obstructive tactics, and the rest of them, including their most mendacious as well as their most forcible stump speakers, were occupied in every part of the Union with slandering the McKinley bill and drawing fearful pictures of the ruin it would bring to the country when it took effect. Most of these demagogues went unanswerd for the reasons we have mentioned. It was not so very strange, therefore, that the people were deceived, and sent the free trade rabble to congress which has been disgracing the country for the last year or so. That was before the McKinley tariff was old enough to stand upon its legs.

Times have changed wondrously since that "triumph of lying." The little McKinley tariff proved to be a robust child. It early began to walk and then to run, and before six months had passed was in hot pursuit of the slanders of its enemies. Once by one it has run them down and silenced forever their slanderous tongues. Now a giant warrior, it stalks abroad, and no sooner does a McKinley tariff liar show himself than he receives a rap over the head which puts him to sleep for good.

During the last month our McKinley tariff warrior has wrought fearful destruction among his enemies. With the tin plate report of Treasury Agent Ayer and the senate report on prices and wages as war clubs, he laid about him right and left, cracking the skulls, so to speak, of the Milles, the Vests, the Vancos, the Springers, the Welles, the Campbells, the Warners and the scores of others of his maligners. Then he seized in one hand—much, we suppose, as Samson seized the jawbone of the ass—the report of Labor Commissioner Peck, with its proof of increased wages and product, and in the other the report of the superintendent of the bank department of New York, with its remarkable showing of increased savings among the working people, and with these two formidable weapons he is still laying lustily about him as we go to press.

More power to his arms and strength to his heart, and may he never seek rest while a single McKinley price, wages or tin plate liar is abroad with an unbroken skull! In his weakness they attacked him and showed not mercy, with malice in their hearts toward all the people. Will not the country be well rid of the slanderous demagogues? Now that the day of retribution is come, mercy is only another name for treason; so press forward, mighty warrior, and heed not the guilty, terror-stricken cries of the flying wretches, but keep up the pursuit and slaughter till the voice of the calamity is heard no more in this fair land of ours.
